Teaching children about electrical safety

What they learn today could be a lifesaver later

Teaching children about electrical safety is an important task we should all take seriously. Electricity is a dynamic power source. Everyday we live our lives surrounded by it, but sometimes we forget just how dangerous electricity can be.

That is why Northwestern Electric established the Watts Up Kids Camp a couple of years ago. The camp teaches youngsters how to be safe around electricity. The camp provides fun activities and facts about the basics—what is electricity, the need to respect its power and how to avoid accidents.

This year, 16 youngsters attended Watts Up Kids Camp on July 30. The children watched videos and a safety demonstration covering potential hazards like downed power lines, climbing trees near power lines and playing hide-and-seek near the big metal electrical boxes. Jarrod Randall, journeyman lineman for NWECC, demonstrated the various tools he uses to help keep him safe while on the job and he fielded some tough questions from the campers.

While we do our best to educate children about electrical safety at the camp or school safety presentations, we need your help to reinforce those lessons. You can do your part at home by teaching your children about the physical dangers associated with electrical components and how to handle electrical plugs, outlets, switches and other devices.

As we all know, kids will be kids. Getting them to show interest in some of these lessons won't be easy but remember what your children learn from you today can be a lifesaver later when they encounter potential hazards. (9574002)

Gather your youngsters around the kitchen table or on the front porch—some of the best teachable moments about electrical safety can happen in and around your home. Look around. There are plenty of opportunities to demonstrate safety that are as close as the electrical outlet on your living room wall. For example, show young children how plugs work, and let them know that even if they are curious about the slits of an electrical outlet, nothing else should be placed inside. Each year about 2,400 children end up in the emergency room after suffering injuries caused by inserting objects—paper clips, pens, screws, nails, forks, hair pins, coins and more—into electrical receptacles. That's about seven children a day who sustain injuries ranging from electric shock to burns.

But this isn't the only electrical mishap that impacts youngsters. Our reliance on electronics and gadgets have left both youngsters and their parents at risk when they overcrowd electrical outlets, continue to use frayed wires, place devices near liquids or leave electronics on for long periods of time. Some of the same guidelines Northwestern Electric offers to protect adults also help protect children. We should all set good examples for our youngsters.

If you need ideas to help with the lessons, try the Electrical Safety Foundation International (www.esfi.org). It is among the many national organizations offering free kits, videos and interactive online tools that make learning and practicing electrical safety fun for you and your children.

And remember, as your children grow older, keep teaching them about the power of electricity and how to use it safely. It could save their life!

Hot dog time at the county fair

County fair time is just around the corner. Thoughts of a county fair bring back memories to many people of fun times—sack races, showing a calf, winning a blue ribbon, visiting with friends, carnivals and the best tasting hot dogs in the world.

NWEC will help fair-goers recapture that feeling as we feed free hot dogs to those attending the Dewey, Ellis, and Harper County fairs.
